Dr. Joseph Hahn came to "Suchasnist" May 22 to get help in the translation of a book in Polish. Stakhiv asked him when he first met Nakonechna. The answer: 1945. Asked why she hadn't introduced Hahn to "Suchasnist" earlier, Hahn replied that they had not been speaking to each other. He added that Nakonechna told him that the "Suchasnist" group were cosmopolitans and socialists. Her own idols ~~were~~ are: Rudnytsky, Shevelov and Petrov.

When Hahn dropped in again May 26 T learned from him that Nakonechna is now in Vienna. Apparently she has four sisters: one lives in Vienna, one in Peremyshl (Ukr. SSR), one in Bratislava (Czechoslovakia) and one in Chicago.

May 29, shortly after noon Nakonechna came to the editorial office of Suchasnist, and started to talk with Stakhiv. The conversation turned into a quarrel. The whole thing started when Stakhiv asked Nakonechna why ^{she} used Stakhiv's and T's names in asking people by telephone to attend the latest Soviet film.

Nakonechna insisted that she hadn't told anyone about her conversations with the Suchasnist people, and wanted to know who told us that she had. Because ~~she~~ neither of the men would name any names (merely telling her to recall with whom she spoke on the telephone), Nakonechna called T a liar, and he asked her to leave the premises. She left in anger calling the men some insulting names.

Before she left, however, Nakonechna said she had spoken by phone to Rudko, Dovhal, Romashko, Kordiuk and Harabach. The reason she had called Harabach was that apparently he had asked her to ask Rudenko to help ~~him~~ his (Harabach's) parents emigrate to Germany.
